

How we handle our images while traveling.

The list included digital storage media made by Wolverine (<http://www.wolverinedata.com/>) and Epson (<http://www.epson.com/>). Some take a laptop computer and many just buy more memory cards. Some have 1GB, 2GB, and even 4GB cards. No one uses micro drives, which is not recommended. A few shoot with high resolution, full frame cameras and use that “new” medium – FILM! A note of WARNING: One member reported using an iPod which is often recommended. However, when she went to download the images to her computer she did not have the right software loaded and she lost all images. She was very upset (that’s not the term I would have use!)